

School newspaper

“Eagles on the Horizon” will be published soon

by Ashley Minzes,
TCN Student Reporter

“Eagles on the Horizon” is a new addition to Vienna High School. It will serve as a newspaper for the school, giving all the late-breaking news of happening school events. It is sponsored by Christine Miller and written by the sixth and eighth hour English classes.

These students will receive “Press Passes” which all the teachers in school will need to see so they know the student will be able to acquire information and validate their integrity as reporters.

Students will also use tape recorders to ensure correct interpretation and direct quoting.

“Eagles on the Horizon” is an attempt to give students hands-on experience in a very real working environment. Students will learn about deadlines as well as headlines. They will learn the differences between fact and opinion, between quoting and paraphrasing, and between desire and genuine ability.

Students will also learn that the fortitude of desire can often compensate for the lack of ability. Published works will build self esteem and allow students to judge themselves on the quality of their own work.

Expect to see “Eagles on the Horizon’s” first issue published by December 15.
